ADABio is the Association for the Development of Organic Agriculture in Ain, Isère, Savoie, and Haute-Savoie.

Founded in 1984, it supports and assists producers, local communities, and citizens on a daily basis to promote local and equitable organic agriculture. Through its actions, it contributes to resource conservation, the preservation of biodiversity, and public health prevention. Finally, it helps forge meaningful and sustainable social and economic ties within these regions.

We support all producers—whether currently practicing organic farming, planning to start, considering the transition, or simply interested in learning about organic farming techniques—from the development of innovative and environmentally friendly techniques through to the implementation of effective marketing strategies. ADABio organizes technical training sessions across all production sectors on a variety of topics: production protocols, biodiversity, cropping systems, equipment, alternative practices, and more. These training sessions are open to everyone—organic, in-conversion, and conventional producers—whether or not they are ADABio members.

ADABio offers individual technical support to better address your needs and the challenges facing your farm. This service is available for a fee and can be arranged for half a day or several days.

ADABio is certified to provide independent consulting services regarding the use of plant protection products. Certification No. RH02380. Insurance: Policyholder No. 2812231H
