Énergie Partagée supports community-led renewable energy projects

Structure : Shared Energy

Energy by citizens, for citizens

Énergie Partagée's mission is to support citizens in reclaiming control over energy, not only financially through their investment in the capital of these regional projects, but also through active participation in the fundamental discussions that shape a sustainable and shared energy transition

Across France, residents, local governments, and community stakeholders are coming together to produce renewable energy collectively. Focused above all on the public interest, they open up project financing and governance to citizens who wish to get involved.

The Shared Energy Movement

Fully dedicated to the emergence of citizen-led renewable energy projects, Énergie Partagée brings together all citizen energy projects and stakeholders and acts on multiple levels to best meet their needs.

Key figures:

- 450 community-led projects
- 1,760 GWh produced annually once all projects are operational
- 1,410,284 people supplied with energy

A powerful driver for accelerating the energy transition, citizen-led energy must be supported through public policy. The goal is to give citizens and communities real power to act, facilitate the adoption and regional planning of renewable energy, and thereby enable greater economic benefits for local areas.
