ADALIA is an environmental and scientific association governed by the 1901 law, whose purpose is the study of insects and other arthropods, with a particular focus on little-known taxa.

The association has set several clear objectives:

- To promote the dissemination of knowledge about insects and other arthropods through publications, meetings, and outreach activities;
- To actively participate in ongoing regional atlas projects on insects and arthropods (ladybugs, bees, Pentatomoid bugs, and Chilopods);

- Organize accessible and enjoyable field trips to allow everyone—from beginners to experienced entomologists—to observe, learn, and enjoy shared moments in nature.
